Monthly commentary

The month of December was dominated by the rise in sovereign bond yields following the Fed's revision of its economic forecasts for 2025, but also by the resurgence of fears about the impact on inflation and the public deficit of the policy that the next US administration wishes to put in place. Regarding the FED, in addition to a slight upward revision of its growth forecast (+0.1%), the institution has significantly raised its inflation expectation to 2.5% from the previous forecast of 2.1%, and has therefore reassessed the future path of its interest rates, forecasting only two cuts of -25bps next year, compared with four previously.

As a result, the US 10-year yield rose by +40bps over the month, an increase of +95bps since its September low. Eurozone yields followed the same upward trajectory: +29bps for the German 10-year yield and +30bps for its French equivalent. This rise can be explained by the movement in US rates, as well as by inflation figures in the eurozone, which have been stagnating for several months and are slow to return to their target level of 2%. Lastly, this movement on both sides of the Atlantic was accompanied by a reconstitution of term premiums via a steepening of the curves (US 2-30 year slope: +34 bp; German 2-20 year slope: +14 bp). Over the period, the Bloomberg Global Aggregate Developed Markets €h index fell by -1.3%.

Equity markets fell in December (MSCI World TR €h: -2.0%), impacted by interest rate movements and profit-taking on US markets after a buoyant year (S&P 500 TR in USD: +25.0%). European markets outperformed (Euro Stoxx 50 TR in EUR: +2.0%), helped by the rebound in luxury goods, automotive and banking stocks, but also by the fall in the euro, which has depreciated by -7.0% against the dollar since the end of September.

Against this backdrop, the YCAP Tactical Investment fund fell -1.8% and outperformed its performance indicator* (-1.9%) thanks to its exposure to French small cap companies and the dollar. Over the period, the average exposure to equities was 59% (compared with 61% in November), while the average interest-rate sensitivity was 2.6, stable compared with November.
